North Carolina Trucking Association and North Carolina Movers Association Announce Strategic Partnership

Raleigh, N.C. – The North Carolina Trucking Association (NCTA) and the North Carolina Movers Association (NCMA) are pleased to announce a strategic partnership aimed at strengthening advocacy efforts and expanding educational opportunities for their members.

Both organizations represent critical sectors of North Carolina’s transportation industry, with shared interests in regulatory issues, workforce development, and industry best practices. While NCTA serves the broader trucking industry and NCMA focuses on professional movers, both groups recognize the value of working more closely together to address common challenges.

Through this partnership, NCTA and NCMA will continue to operate autonomously while collaborating on key advocacy efforts, including combating illegal moving operations and addressing predatory towing practices. Additionally, the two associations will coordinate on educational events and industry training to better serve their respective members.

“This partnership makes sense because both organizations are committed to protecting and advancing the interests of North Carolina’s transportation industry. By working together on issues like illegal moving and predatory towing, we can amplify our impact and bring stronger solutions to the table,” said NCTA President and CEO Ben Greenberg.

“We are excited to align with the North Carolina Trucking Association on shared priorities. Movers and truckers face many of the same regulatory and operational challenges, and by leveraging our combined resources, we can better support our members and promote a fair, competitive business environment,” said NCMA Executive Director Pam Stanley.
